

Choice questions (yes/no, either/or, multiple choice)

Support Description

Spoken and written choice questions help students narrow down all the possible language variations that they could use when responding to a question. If a student cannot answer an open ended question by themselves, a teacher can reframe a question so that they can choose a teacher generated response. This can take the pressure off of students to think through all of the grammar and vocabulary necessary to respond to an open ended question.
